

Reflection on Boundaries

Social systems have boundaries, though these may be harder to detect than those of a physical system. For instance, your selection of friends may be influenced by unconscious factors. Reflect: do you have "membranes" which only let people of a certain age, gender, ethnicity, or socioeconomic background in—or simply those who happen to share your particular interests?

What would happen if you changed those boundaries?